

Imagine solar panels being manufactured in the GTA and installed on every public building, creating good green jobs for all.

Toronto Hydro can help make it happen.

The Good Jobs for All Coalition is calling on Toronto Hydro to:

- install solar panels on public buildings;
- buy “made-in-Ontario” local green products;
- encourage solar panel manufacturers to come to Toronto, or help existing manufacturers retool;
- ensure workers of colour and youth from marginalized communities get equitable access to new jobs in the green energy sector.

“We lost nearly 60,000 manufacturing jobs in Toronto over the past decade. Toronto Hydro has the opportunity to help rebuild our manufacturing sector and revitalize our city.”

Carolyn Egan, President, Steelworkers Toronto Area Council

“Rexdale has the highest unemployment rate in Toronto. Creating good green jobs is the lynchpin that will turn our community around. All the public buildings that we own, like our schools and hospitals, can be a part of the green economy.”

Nigel Barriffe, Rexdale resident, teacher, &
Good Jobs for All Coalition member

“By investing in the green economy and hiring more youth, people of colour, and newcomers, our publicly-owned utility can be a leader in greening our city while building an equitable Toronto for all.”

John Camilleri, president of the Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE) Local 1, which represents Toronto Hydro workers

“All my friends work casual jobs at movie theatres and restaurants. I have a career. I think other young people like me should have careers too. That’s why I support this campaign.”

Chris Williamson, pre-apprentice electrician and graduate of the Building Trades’ Hammer Heads program which helps priority youth secure trade apprenticeships
